Mange becomes first UK caterer to win sustainable marine conservation approval

Mange, the London-based events caterer, is today named as the first UK caterer to win approval as a fully-certified sustainable fish and seafood supplier, enabling clients to be served environmentally-friendly produce at its functions.

The caterer's ground-breaking certification by the Marine Stewardship Council and Aquaculture Stewardship Council comes as consumers turn to sustainable produce following the success of the Blue Planet II television series.

The MSC and ASC non-governmental organisations are committed to addressing unsustainable fishing, responsible aquaculture, and safeguarding future seafood supplies.

The first certification of a UK caterer means that clients can choose to only have chain-of-custody certified sustainable fish and responsibly farmed seafood products at Mange events.

Anthony Issroff, founder and managing director of Mange, said: "We are seeing a change in consumer behaviour as public attention turns to the catastrophic impact of over-fishing and pollution of our seas"

"Mange has always striven to use responsibly-sourced, sustainable produce. We strongly believe in maintaining the longevity of the marine produce we sell. It's a real honour to win formal accreditation for our sustainability credentials. Diners and consumers around the country are responding to Sir David Attenborough's rallying call to do more to protect the marine environment."

George Clark, MSC's Senior Commercial Manager, said: "Mange has been providing fantastic food and service for our organization for nearly ten years. We look forward to other caterers following their lead and helping to transform the seafood market into a sustainable business."

Mange has been established since 1993, opened its Clerkenwell kitchens in 2013 and caters for events at venues such as LSO St Luke's and the South Bank Centre.
